SCHOLARSHIP APPLICATION TIPS

For applicants

- Proofread everything! If you can, get a friend or teacher to proofread your application materials just to make sure you haven't missed any typos.
- Carefully read and follow all directions and applicant criteria on the scholarship's information page and the online application page.

Cover Letter

The judges are looking for a personal connection and a compelling narrative.

Be professional, but use your own voice. Be genuine.

- Make sure you address the requested topics of personal background, financial need, and career goals in 300 words or less.
- Convince the judges why they should select you. Highlight your best qualifications.
- Use examples to show you fit the specific scholarship you are applying for, but don't just re-list your resume.

Work Samples

- Your work samples are one of the most important application components.
- Judges are looking for applicants who are prepared for careers in broadcasting, journalism, or marketing.
- They are looking for professional quality work, and they know it when they see it!
- Upload your best work samples to a site like YouTube, Vimeo, Sound Cloud or other platform and include the URLs to these samples on your application form. Briefly describe your role in each of the pieces, whether as producer, editor, reporter, etc.
- If you have a personal website or use social media platforms to share your work samples, it is important to include these as well.

Resume

- Be organized and consistent. Keep the formatting simple and easy to read so that key information like your name stands out.
- List activities chronologically within each section so the most recent is highlighted.
- Include work history, community service, club affiliations, honors and awards.
- Be detailed and results-oriented. "Produced X stories per week for student news channel with viewership of X" is much better than "Reported for student news channel."
- Things you might want to include on your resume are your relevant experience, achievements, and skills. As a student, you may not have much journalism work experience, but internships or even volunteer experience counts too. Achievements might include awards, scholarships, or professional organization memberships. Specialized skills or experiences like expertise in video editing software, fluency in a foreign language, or attending a journalism conference can set you apart from other candidates. Video or infographic resumes are unique and creative, but for this application you'll need to upload your resume as a PDF or Word document.
